Herrick Says Such a System Would Help Communities

HE URGES FARMERS' CO-OPERATION

The Best Way to Organize Selling and Purchasing

Hot Springs, Va., July 15 .- In an address on "The Need of Rural Credits" before the National Fertilizer association convention here yesterday, Myron T. Herrick, former ambassador to France, urged as a remedy for whatever trouble exists in rural communities the establishment of cooperative organizations of farmers. The greatest of all the needs of American agriculture is, in Mr. Herrick's opinion, organized selling and purchasing power.

"Organized selling and purchasing power is best attained through cooperation," said Mr. Herrick. "Cooperation must be built up by the farmers themselves by starting at the grass roots and depending on their own resources and efforts, first assembled and combined in basic units, or local cooperative banks, or credit societies. The mistaken belief that these basic, local units are merely little savings and loan associations in which the farmers make small loans to one another from their savings, has been written into the Massachusetts, New York, Wisconsin, Texas and other state laws on the erroneously so-called "credit unions," and it has made those laws worthless. The error is most unfortunate because it had beclouded the minds of the public about cooperative banking. All these laws will have to be recast.

"A rural cooperative bank is exactly what its name signifies, and something nore, because it takes the place to some extent of the country store. It possesses general banking powers, but delimits its area, restricts its operations to agricultural projects, confirms its credit facilities to members, and borrows, if possiciation like a savings bank.

Brightening Rural Life.

Just imagine 200 or 2,000 people coming together for one whole, long, blessed day, every month from May to October, year after year, for nothing in the world but play! And the majority of these, until the inauguration of play-days, had found life an devoid of interest outside of toil that they had become old beyond their rears, careworn and often morbid. New their outlook on life is broader and kindler; homes are happier; for the first. time grandparents, children and grandchildren enjoy the same old, familiar games ingether. Each one prides him-self on being loyal to the spirit of the day and place, and the play-day slegan is "Make others happy."
